

A public poll on the word 'surgeon'

June 2012

Foreword from Susan Woodward, Chair of the RCS Patient Liaison Group

With patients increasingly able to choose their treatments from a growing range of healthcare professionals there is a growing need for clarity on the level of training, skills and experience of those who treat them.

Job titles convey much of this information in a simple and direct manner, which is essential in order to enable a patient to provide informed consent and have confidence in the treatment he or she is receiving.

Worryingly, clarity regarding job titles in the health sector can often be lacking, and in the case of surgery in particular there are no legal restrictions about who can be called a 'surgeon'.

The Patient Liaison Group (PLG) has been concerned about this issue for some time and commissioned this poll in order to gain an understanding of the public perception of the word 'surgeon' and the expectations that accompany this title in terms of education and training.

The poll results indicate a resounding public consensus on these issues, sharing our high degree of concern that there are surgeons providing treatment in the NHS who do not hold medical degrees and who are not surgical specialists.

With the clear call to action in the poll, the PLG will be taking this issue forward by campaigning for the job title of 'surgeon' in healthcare to be protected by law, in the same manner that 'dentist' is currently protected. We believe that without this clarification, patients cannot make sufficiently informed decisions about their treatment.

ICM interviewed a random sample of 2,034 adults aged 18+ in Great Britain online between 22 and 24 June 2012. Surveys were conducted across the country and the results have been weighted to the profile of all adults. ICM is a member of the British Polling Council and abides by its rules. For further information please visit www.icmresearch.com

Q1

What do you think a surgeon does?

Q2

Have you checked or would you check the qualifications of a surgeon before consenting to an operation from that surgeon?

Q3

Would you expect a surgeon to have a medical degree? ie a degree obtained from a medical school.

Q4

How concerned, if at all, would you be if your surgeon did not hold a medical degree?

Q5 Would you expect a surgeon working in the UK to be on a list of professionals who are recognised as specialists in surgery (as opposed to general practice specialists or other medical specialists)?

Q6 Do you agree or disagree that the word 'surgeon' in a job title should be restricted by law? ie legally you could only be called a surgeon if you meet the education and training associated with the job?

Produced by the Publications Department, The Royal College of Surgeons of England

Patient Liaison Group
The Royal College of Surgeons of England
35–43 Lincoln's Inn Fields
London
WC2A 3PE

The Royal College of Surgeons of England © 2012
Registered charity number 212808

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior written permission of The Royal College of Surgeons of England.

While every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the information contained in this publication, no guarantee can be given that all errors and omissions have been excluded. No responsibility for loss occasioned to any person acting or refraining from action as a result of the material in this publication can be accepted by The Royal College of Surgeons of England and the contributors.

For all enquiries contact: plg@rcseng.ac.uk